Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health of sedentary middle-aged men. The subjects were 20 men, aged 40-50 years, who were sedentary and had no history of cardiovascular disease. They were divided into two groups: a control group and an exercise group. The exercise group performed a 12-week training program consisting of aerobic and resistance exercises. The control group did not exercise. Physical fitness was measured by heart rate, blood pressure, and body mass index (BMI). Health was measured by a self-reported questionnaire. The results showed that the exercise group had significantly lower heart rate, blood pressure, and BMI than the control group after 12 weeks. The exercise group also reported significantly better health than the control group. These findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve physical fitness and health in sedentary middle-aged men.

He was very old, and he was very poor. He was very old, and he was very poor. He was

BATMAN

But a very important thing to know is that the Batman is not a person.

The name "Batman" is not a name. It's a title. It's a title that only one person can hold.

There are always people who want to be Batman. But they don't know what it's like to be Batman.

Let me tell you something. Batman is not a person. He's a title.

There are always people who want to be Batman. But they don't know what it's like to be Batman.

LEGAL LAWBREAKERS

They Are the Men of the Underwriter Laboratories, and Their Job Is to Put Out Fires Before They Begin

IT was dark outside. Inside the room, a shadowy figure examined the colorful drapes covering the windows and the new rug on the floor. He struck a match, but then blew it out as a fresh thought struck him. Better check the gas-escape first!

He crossed to a window behind the desk and lifted it a bit higher. He also pushed the desk over to one side. No point in having any obstructions in the way of a quick exit.

Satisfied now, he returned, lit a match and applied it to a fuse. He waited a brief moment to make sure the fuse was burning steadily, then dashed across to the open window, and stepped out.

The man then swiftly moved across an open field, planted himself behind a thick tree, and waited.

He didn't have to wait long. There was a burst of flames, followed by a thick wall of black smoke.

But now he did a strange thing. He removed a fire extinguisher from a black bag he had previously placed near the tree. Then, as flames began shooting out of the window, he crept close and began spraying at the fire with his extinguisher. Five minutes later, the fire was out.

The man now entered the room and carefully examined the belongings of the room.

At this point, a police officer appeared.

"How's it look, Jim?" asked the policeman.

"Not bad, Harry," was the reply. "The drapes are hardly burned through, and the rug shows only minor surface damage. I'd say the extinguisher has passed the test with flying colors!"

In case you're still wondering about a man who starts fires, puts them out, then tests a fire extinguisher while an officer of the law stands by, you should know that the legal lawbreaker was one of a whole corps of experts who work for the Underwriters' Laboratories. An outgrowth of the National Board of Fire Underwriters, the Laboratories' one mission is "to protect loss of life and property from the hazards of fire, smoke and noise."

The idea for the Laboratories started back in 1893 when the first Chicago World's Fair was under construction. The chief attraction of the Fair was scheduled to be a remarkable little light-globe called an incandescence bulb. The invention of a young scientist by the name of Thomas Edison.

But the fire insurance companies were worried. For all anybody knew, the fire in the bulb might break out of its glass cage and start a conflagration. As a result, they sent an investigator over to check on the possible dangers.

The investigator teamed up with the fire department. He examined all the exhibits at the fair and reported back that while the incandescence bulb seemed safe enough, there were quite a number of other gadgets that should be given further tests before being marketed.

This report suggested the establishment of a non-profit testing bureau to check on the safety of all electrical appliances before being offered to the public.

Since that time 4,000 manufacturers have become clients of the Underwriters Laboratories, and last year almost a million Labels of Approval were granted to such products as alarm systems, electric wiring, and fire-extinguishing chemicals.

If a product fails to meet the rigid tests of the Laboratories' testers, a label is denied, and the manufacturer is asked to make necessary changes.

The field inspectors of the laboratories receive a variety of applications to test. Television sets, radios, electric washers, irons, deep freezers, and ovens are only a few of the products that are literally destroyed before they are approved.

In one section of the laboratory, you may see a man taking a steel ball and hurl it with all his might at the television screen of a costly set. If this ball to break the screen, he tries again with an even heavier ball.

There is good reason behind this seemingly madman. You may not know it, but the first television screens were unprotected by a layer of shatteredproof glass as sets now are. Hence a TV tube is a disaster, a tube that develops a leak might result in an explosion that could hurt glass as far as 25 feet. It was a Laboratory expert who first discovered this danger. Thanks to his vigilance, that danger no longer exists.

Similarly, other products such as electric irons and cords are treated with carelessness that might lead to fire. Before Laboratory experts want to work, an electric iron, if left connected to an outlet, would sooner or later start a blaze. It was a Laboratory specialist who came up with the idea of attaching a cut-off to the iron. Every modern iron now switches itself off after reaching a certain heat.
